The present study was undertaken to determine if variations in the fatty acid content of the myocardial phospholipids and cytosolic proteins, following death, could be related to the post-mortem time intervals (2 h, 4 h, and 8 h) between death and organ removal for sampling. For the fatty acid analysis, myocardial samples were obtained from eight cadavers. All myocardial samples were obtained from the right ventricular wall and were pooled by time interval (2 h, 4 h, and 8 h), before analysis. Some of these samples were stored in formalin or were frozen immediately
