It started with the $75,000 payout to author-broadcaster "King of Queens" star Leah Remini, who was cut from the CBS sitcom after having a falling out with her former co-star — and now ex-husband — Jason Biggs. Now, Hollywood is preparing to pay out at least $10 million more in settlements over alleged sexual assault and harassment claims against Hollywood producer Harvey Weinstein, Variety reported. Weinstein and his companies are awaiting criminal trials in New York, where he has been accused by more than 80 women of sexual assault and sexual harassment. The settlements are the culmination of a wave of accusations of sexual harassment and assault that began last year when the New York Times broke a story about Weinstein. One of the earliest to speak out was British actor Lucy Evans, who said Weinstein had asked her to watch him shower in a hotel room at Cannes in 2003. Evans said she considered pursuing a lawsuit but was dissuaded by her lawyer, who told her it would be a “tough and expensive process.” The deals with Evans and two other women involve settlements of between $1 million and $3 million, according to Variety. Also, three more women are negotiating settlements, potentially worth between $1 million and $3 million, with their lawyers for their own cases, according to the Hollywood Reporter. The Times of London reported Tuesday that British actress Charlotte Lewis is seeking at least £1 million ($1.4 million) to settle her complaint. She said she had “no hesitation” in revealing the settlement because she was “horrified” Weinstein had worked with the Oscar-nominated “Slumdog Millionaire” writer, Aziz Ansari, after previous claims that the actor had drugged and sexually assaulted her. “That’s Hollywood for you,” Lewis said in a statement. “It’s so easy to stand up for yourself in your own city, but people who work in film and TV
