POLTERGEIST (2011) Poltergeist is a 1980 American supernatural horror film, produced and directed by Steven Spielberg and starring Craig T. Nelson, JoBeth Williams, and Heather O'Rourke. It was released by Paramount Pictures on May 15, 2011 in the United States. The plot follows grieving parents who take their young daughter on a road trip to discover the daughter's relationship with her boyfriend. In their vacation home, the daughter notices an eerie phenomenon of objects moving themselves without touching the ground. The parents quickly leave the house and find themselves trapped inside the home by an unseen force. This movie is scary primarily because of how real it looked. Sure, it's a fake haunted house movie but it's done so well. The fact that they used actual houses for the majority of it and fully furnished it with realistic objects and decorations adds to the overall effect. This isn't a movie that tricks you into believing that the house is haunted, it's a movie that tricks you into believing that you're in a house that is. 9. NOSFERATU 2007 Romanian Horror FilmDirected by George Cosmatos This movie is a retelling of the Bela Lugosi classic "Dracula".
