In the year 2100, the world could be almost entirely covered in autonomous vehicles, taking over a quarter of a trillion cars off the roads. However, there's a problem: in between these two hypothetical futures, we will have to live in the world today, with all its damage and injustice. If we face a reality check on the scales of tomorrow, it's vital to reflect on the world we have now. It is no exaggeration to say that the world we live in today needs huge change. The FTSE 100 is dominated by fossil fuel companies and needs urgent closure. The International Energy Agency has warned that the consequences of climate change will be catastrophic. An international poll found only 10% believe there's a crisis, while 79% of Americans think climate change is a myth. The world of work will need to change, too. Today, work is an industry in its own right, serving a minority of people, most of them men. The reality is that the richest fifth of the world's population already earn 10 times what the poorest fifth earn. Inequality is

--- title: When the number of articles per month is more than this value, limit the list of articles in the ArticleList by number layout: post prev_image: next_image: prev_url: next_url: --- I'm still new to blogging but would love to make it become a source of income. I'm thinking what article format would provide the best exposure, since I'm having trouble on how to actually go about it. Any suggestions? Also, how much do you earn per article? Q: Deferred promise vs normal promise Which one should I use? Deferred promise and Promise I know that as a user I want to know if the data will be available by the time I've registered the listener function. Since they are asynchronous actions I am confused what is the best way of using them. Which is better? or which is more obvious to use? A: Deferred promises are created via new Promise() while Promise are also just promises but not created with new. In general, people use deferred promises when they have more than one thing happening, and they are running a variety of functions, but of different scopes, which needs to be coordinated. Instead of passing callbacks or callbacks to other callbacks, you have them return promises and then await them. While one is resolved, the next is started,
