The patch testing potential of dental products. The purpose of this study was to investigate the potential for patch testing by means of photoallergens incorporated into dental products. Standard procedures were used to sensitize guinea pigs and humans to individual dental components as well as in combination with other dental components. The most sensitive photoallergen in animal studies was thiuram mix which made up 77% of the patch test reactions of guinea pigs to dental components. Fungicides made up 10% of the reactions of this group. Also, cephalosporins sensitized the animal model. In the human studies, thiuram mix was used at 50% concentration on 36 contact dermatitis patients. At the 25% concentration, the following allergens were tested: cephalosporins, thiuram mix, Lophoteran, ampicillin, polysorbate 80, lecithin, chlorhexidine, and benzophenone-3. Thiuram mix showed the highest positive reaction rate of 37.5%. Chlorhexidine gave a positive reaction rate of 15.6%. The group of lecithin and the PEG group of the polysorbate 80 were negative. The results suggest that the use of thiuram mix could be a potential allergen in some patients. Association of Ankylosing Spondylitis and Psoriasis: Review of the Literature.
